Russian Troops Pull Back From

- Russia said it was returning more troops and weapons to bases, yet another gesture apparently aimed at easing fears it is planning to invade Ukraine, even as the US said the threat of an attack remained.
- Russia has massed about 150,000 troops east, north, and south of Ukraine.
- Russia has denied having any invasion plans and has mocked Western warnings about an imminent invasion as "hysteria" and "madness."
- The announcement coming from Putin is the strongest signal from Russia that it is trying to de-escalate the situation that has led to the military standoff near the Ukrainian border.
- This is the first sign that Russia might be pulling back from escalation, after weeks of brinkmanship with the West.
