DIRECTIONS

Read the passage carefully and answer the questions given below.

Some people say that man's desire for war is due to his fight for survival and that war is necessary to preserve his virility. Yet, war now-a-days leaves a legacy of the weakest men and stimulates not the noble but the bestial qualities of mankind.

Adventure of some kind is necessary for man; he will inevitably deteriorate physically and mentally if his life is one of ease and luxury lived in an atmosphere of 'Safety First'. This is the real reason behind our love of sports in the open air. It is no use being a millionaire if one suffers from chronic indigestion; a tramp with good innards is far happier, Nothing that money can buy is worthwhile without good health. There is no better way to perfect health and physical fitness than to walk over or climb hills and mountains.

But mountains give us much more than mere physical fitness ; they exercise the mental faculties as well. Climbing a high and difficult peak is as much a mental exercise as a physical exercise. It calls for sense and judgement for planning and thinking ahead, for anticipating difficulty and danger, for responsibility towards one's companions and best of all, it brings the mountaineer into touch with the beauties of the universe.

Q. According to the passage, nothing that money can buy is worthwhile

(a) without love of sports

(b) without adventure

(c) without good health

(d) without good mental faculties
