Finke River Recognised as the World's Oldest Flowing River

- Recent geological studies have reaffirmed that the Finke River of Australia is likely the world's oldest continuously surviving river system, with origins dating back 300-400 million years, far earlier than most known rivers on Earth.
- The Finke River, known as Larapinta to the Indigenous Arrernte people, began flowing long before dinosaurs appeared on Earth.
- It stretches for about 640 kilometres, traversing the Northern Territory and parts of South Australia.
- Its course cuts across some of the oldest rock formations on the planet, making it a natural archive of Earth's geological evolution and climate history.
- The strongest evidence of the Finke's antiquity lies in its path through the MacDonnell Ranges.
- Instead of flowing around these hard quartzite mountains, the river cuts directly through them, forming deep gorges.
- This is explained by a geological phenomenon called antecedence, where a river is older than the surrounding mountains.

Museveni Secures Seventh Term in Uganda As President

- It aims to conserve species like the Gangetic River Dolphin, India's national aquatic animal.
- The project focuses on habitat protection, scientific monitoring, community participation and reducing threats such as pollution and accidental fishing deaths.
- The dolphin survey will be conducted in two phases.
- In the first phase, teams will cover the main stem of the Ganga from Bijnor to Ganga Sagar, along with the Indus River.
